Philosophy

Would you ever think the teachings of the Greek philosopher Aristotle from 330 B.C. would apply to many of the problems we experience today? Most people would answer that question with a “no”; however, the correct answer is “yes.” And at King’s, we have proven it. If you are interested in learning about how the life changing insights of ancient and modern philosophers can improve the society we live in today, then majoring in philosophy might be for you.

Philosophy at King’s College

The study of philosophy dates back to 600 B.C., but its concepts are hardly ancient. While dissecting and analyzing the answers to many universal questions, King’s philosophy majors develop a deep understanding of human behavior and thought processes.

A future with Philosophy

The classifieds are not jammed with headers exclaiming “philosopher wanted,” but King’s philosophy program provides students with transferable skills that can be used in a variety of settings. These skills include the ability to effectively solve problems, persuade people to look at situations from various perspectives, and debate and determine effective business policies.

Multiply Your Career Options

Because of the unique flexibility of King’s philosophy program, some students select a second major or minor in another discipline to maximize their future opportunities. While any area of study complements philosophy, the best combinations are pre-law, pre-med and theology.

In addition to considering a second major or minor, many students elect to continue their studies after they graduate from King’s in graduate school.

Job and Graduate School Placement

Many people who have earned a degree in philosophy have flourished in the workplace. Here are some places where our alumni have found success:

- Beasley School of Law, Temple University
- University of Scranton, Master of Arts Degree in Theology
- Royal School of Veterinary Studies, University of Edinburgh
- First Hospital Wyoming Valley, mental health technician
